THAT it is a wise son that knoweth his own mother might well be the reflection of the alumnus returning after a lapse of years to his alma mater. The dear old lady has certainly spruced up a good deal, added furbelows and flounces, eliminated wrinkles, and accomplished who can recount what unnumbered things by way of improving her appearance. Different in outward aspect to be sure; but at heart the same: vigorous, independent, democratic,—not the Old Dartmouth of a quarter century since, but the Old Dartmouth of today, venerable in tradition and experience, youthful in optimism and capacity for achievement. So in the reunions of the Commencement season, she welcomes her sons of all generations to share with her the affectionate memories of the past, the worthy gratification of the present, and the ardent hope for the future.

The College is still in its transitional stage. The past fifteen years constitute but part of an epoch of growth and development. Material stability, national influence, and educational leadership are not to be secured and maintained by the labors of a decade and a half. Yet in that period the way to these things has been made straight, and the hardest part of the journey accomplished. That which is to come lies mainly in the hands of Trustees, Alumni and Faculty. The price of success will be unshrinking and enthusiastic loyalty,—the kind of loyalty that is willing to view today in the light of tomorrow, and, if necessary, to sow sacrifice that others may reap reward.

The past year has produced considerable academic discussion of the honor system for conducting college examinations. Not only has the system been discussed, but it has been adopted by a number of institutions. Reports as to the success of its operation vary. In one instance, at least, it has been declared a failure; and good folk have in consequence wasted much worry over the degeneracy of the times. But the scoffer sits by and casually inquires why all this fuss about honor in examinations: why not honor in everything? Why should undergraduates assume the discipline of some of their number at one time and not at another? The arousing of a sense of collective responsibility on the part of college students and the logical establishment of an effective form of self-government is an end most worthy of attainment. Granting that it is eventually to be gained by training from specific instances to general principles, there seems no good reason for beginning at the point where the relation between faculty and students is often most delicate and peculiar.

During the years since the organization of the Tuck School, Dartmouth College has stood alone as representative of the graduate or professional idea in training for business. The commercial courses of other institutions are on a plane with their regular undergraduate courses. What position Harvard University would take, when she should see fit to establish a school of higher commercial education, has been a matter of conjecture. It is interesting to note that, in the establishment of a Graduate School of Business Administration, Harvard takes a position with Dartmouth. An announcement of the new school, presenting details of its organization, has not been issued, but the very general official statements which have been made suggest how very like the Tuck School the new school will be.

It will offer a two year course, and a bachelor's degree will be required for entrance. In this latter respect it presents its principal point of difference from the Tuck School, which admits students of three years' undergraduate standing. In other respects the similarity to the Tuck School is conspicuous. The Harvard School will have a dean of its own and, although worked out by the department of economics and founded on that department, in that it will include certain college courses in its curriculum, it will on the whole present a distinct body of courses of its own and will have a distinct individuality. The general aim of its training will be for business organization, rather than technical in the engineering or trade school sense. Courses in business organization and administration, accounting, banking, transportation, and insurance are offered. It has not been announced just what degree will be given; it is probable, however, that it will be the Master of Arts, another point of difference from the Tuck School, which offers the Master of Commercial Science. It is a source of gratification to Dartmouth that Harvard, after a thorough consideration of the subject and a careful observation of higher commercial education in other institutions, should in the organization of its new school indorse the principle under which the Tuck School has been organized and administered.

In story books, college life consists mainly of athletic victories, sweet singing on the campus, and strenuous, if often transitory, affairs of the heart. No doubt the Prom girl, after the four days' social whirlwind of Junior week at Dartmouth, carries away a similar idea. Perhaps it is just as well. Why trouble her with the dismal fact that her charms are tempting Junior X to overcut a course wherein his mark is on the shady side of fifty; or that the perfectly lovely drive over the Norwich hills with Senior Y became possible only after that young gentleman's hurried consultation with the dark-skinned future purchaser of his immaculate flannels; or why allude to the painful certainty that as the deep-toned College bell tolls its mellow lay, so musical, so romantic, numerous irate instructors are hunting up additional slips for the grim record of absences from recitation? Fortunately Prom week comes; fortunately it quickly goes. While it is with us, let it be enjoyed and approved if for no other reason than that, after it is done, the wherewithal for extended wanderings will be lacking, and the average of classroom attendance in consequence materially improved.

Some recent regulations adopted by the faculty, with the purpose of raising the standard of scholarship, suggest a few rambling, non-pedagogical reflections on the subject of the relation of college students to their studies.

In the first place, it is evident that the college, as compared with the preparatory school on the one hand and the professional school on the other, labors under a certain disadvantage in maintaining a high quality of scholarship. The pupil in a preparatory school knows that he must do a certain grade of work, generally higher than merely for graduation, or he will not be able to enter college. Of course there is much time spent in special work for entrance examinations, which some scholars think might more profitably be devoted to other things. On the whole, however, the definiteness of the goal which the colleges individually and by cooperation have established for the work of the preparatory schools has produced excellent results.

Schools are forced to maintain their work at a high grade or results disagreeable for school, teachers, and pupils, speedily follow.

In the professional school, again, the student has a definite object before him: the best possible technical and practical training for his future work. Students consider carefully the advantages of the different schools of law, medicine, and theology, and the tendency is marked to choose those institutions whose diplomas give their graduates an immediate standing in their professions.

In the case of a college of liberal arts, however, it does not appear that the excellence of curriculum or instruction is at present a factor of large significance in determining what institution is chosen for or by the great majority of undergraduates. There is practically no competition among colleges in this respect. Athletic, social, family, sentimental and financial considerations govern the choice of an institution in most cases. Thus the student enters college with no definite educational demands, and a vigorous desire to enjoy the varied attractions of college life to the utmost.

The problem before every college is to induce such men—average undergraduates—to give sufficient time and attention to their courses, so that they may not merely by good luck succeed in getting a diploma, but acquire a thorough mental training, a substantial fund of information, and an enduring appreciation of intellectual things.

There is an impression prevalent among students that all the advantages of a liberal education can be obtained without much mental exertion. Hence the wide election of elementary courses and the resulting always superficial and frequently distorted information on a multitude of subjects. Very many students have an attitude of indifference toward courses of study which have, so far as they can see, no definite bearing on what they intend to do after leaving college.

The point of view adopted toward professional studies, whether in or out of college, or toward courses which, rightly or wrongly are regarded as "practical," is quite different.

It is evident that just the kind of education that the college is organized to give, namely a thorough liberal training, is largely vitiated by the disinclination of the students to avail themselves of their opportunities. And yet good professional schools are demanding, if not a college degree, at least two or three years of liberal study as a prerequisite for entrance.

Can anything be done to improve the condition of undergraduate scholarship? Anything, that is to say, not in the nature of academic police regulations aimed at the notoriously poor students? If an institution seriously tries to improve existing conditions it must be by the cooperation of trustees, administration, and faculty. The trustees should see to it that the institution has a thoroughly trained body of instructors, sufficient in number to make small classes and personal contact with the students a possibility. The teaching force in most colleges is too small to be effective, especially for the work of freshman and sophomore years.

The administration can do much by emphasizing the intellectual ideals of the institution to the public, the students, and the alumni. If the intellectual task of a college is kept in the foreground, those various student activities which now cause so much debate, will surely tend to resume their proper, normal place in the general scheme of college life.

And finally a word as to the relation of the curriculum to scholarship, a matter which it is especially the duty of the faculty to observe and investigate. The elective system does not prove entirely satisfactory, to say the least, and attempts have been made at different colleges with the last few years to modify it. It would undoubtedly raise the standard of scholarship if every student pursued three or four non-professional subjects during his college course, until he obtained in them a certain degree of mastery both of subject matter and method, and could make his own reading and observation contribute to his further knowledge of them. Is there any reason why the granting of a degree should not be conditioned upon passing a satisfactory examination at the end of a series of courses forming a unit? If not, would not such an experiment be worth while?

PROPERTIES OF THE COLLEGE WHICH CONSTITUTE THE COLLEGE PLANT*

The term "Plant" is a term borrowed from business to represent the very great physical expansion which academic institutions have undergone during the past two decades. This physical expansion has been due chiefly to three causes. First, the scientific development of the college curriculum, applied not only to the so-called scientific departments but to all departments, has necessitated in each case a new or greatly increased equipment. The library of a college has changed in character within a generation about as much as its laboratories.

Second, the adjustment of the public school system to college requirements, greatly increasing the numerical size of colleges, has practically created a new problem, namely, that of the housing of students. The increase from this adjustment makes little impression upon state universities for these are constructed upon an elastic plan. Its effect upon the old-time endowed college is more marked. The type of mind which these latter institutions represent is rather intolerant of size. Trustees, faculties, and graduates have been somewhat reluctant to face the alternative which has been forced upon these colleges, either to become essentially undemocratic through some kind of artificial restriction, thus necessitating state universities in states where they do not now exist, or to take their part in providing for the natural growth of the academic constituency in a growing democracy. The duplication of college plants in the older states has, however, come to be recognized as an economic impossibility. It is more and more clearly seen that the enlarging college constituency must be provided for through the enlargement of existing colleges.

A third cause for the physical expansion of the older colleges is found in many cases in the introduction of those conveniences which are necessary for efficiency. The country college has been obliged to provide for many necessities such as a sure and abundant supply of water, heat, and electricity, which in the cities are usually rated as a part of the public utilities. Every college wherever situated must be able to guarantee its sanitary conditions, to protect itself from the waste of effort always attending insufficient means, and in general to increase to the largest possible degree the facilities for its work.

The development of the College Plant, however, is not a matter simply of equipment, or of size, or of convenience; it indicates also a financial policy. The modern college is still in some vital aspects an eleemosynary institution, but it is more: it is a corporate body capable of taking part in its own support. Through a suitable plant it acquires an earning power which can be relied upon as a constant source of financial strength. The current revenue of the endowed universities and larger colleges is now drawn in about equal parts from the income from invested funds, and from their earnings in the form of tuition, fees, and rents, a fact which will be brought out more fully in the next and succeeding articles of this series upon the current income and expenditures of the College.

* This article is the fourth of a series of authorized statements which the BI-MONTHLY will publish during the year, having to do with the resources and expenditures of the College.

For convenience the classification of the properties which make up the College Plant is given in a tabulated rather than in a narrative form. The tabulation is based upon statistics prepared in the treasurer's office.

In noting the sources which have contributed to the College buildings, it may in general be said that the non-productive buildings of the College have been provided for by gift or bequest, while the productive properties have, in the majority of cases, been treated as investments. In the following enumeration of the properties which constitute the College Plant no estimate is made of the value of the College Park, or of certain outlying local properties which are held for the improvement of the College, nor of houses owned by the College and occupied by members of the faculty.

No estimate is made of the value of the strictly educational equipment of the College, in its library, 100,000 volumes, nor of the various laboratories, nor of the contents of Butterfield Museum.

COLLEGE NEWS

TEACHERS' CONFERENCE

The eighth annual May conference between the members of the College faculty and the teachers and superintendents of secondary schools, was held May 14, 15, and 16. The subject for consideration was, "Problems in the Organization and Administration of Secondary Schools."

The subject discussed on the afternoon of May 14 was "Vocational Training in Secondary Schools." Mr. Charles H. Morse of the Massachusetts Industrial Education Commission emphasized the increasing demand for vocational training, and Prof. H. S. Person outlined a plan for the ideal system of providing it. The general discussion was opened by President William D. Gibbs, of the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts. At the evening session Acting President John K. Lord welcomed the visitors, then about eighty in number. Dr. Luther H. Gulick, director of physical training in the schools of Greater New York, then spoke on "Interschool Athletics as a Factor in the Development of the Social Conscience," dealing with the important effects of school athletics in a most interesting way.

The session on Friday morning, May 15, was devoted to "Physical Training and Athletics in the Secondary Schools." Dr. H. N. Kingsford spoke on "Pure Air—a Prerequisite for Health," and gave demonstrations of methods for testing the air in the school-room. "The Physical Conditions of Students Entering College," were discussed by Prof. John W. Bowler, who presented statistics and suggested remedies. The general discussion was opened by Principal Harlan M. Bisbee, of the Robinson Female Seminary, Exeter. The remainder of the morning program was as follows: "The Possibilities of a System of Athletics that is Confined to the School Itself," illustrated by Mr. Malcolm K. Gordon, St. Paul's School, Concord; "Do the prevailing forms of school athletics benefit a sufficient number of the scholars to provide for the physical needs of the schools?" Superintendent William D. Parkinson, Waltham; "The Advantages and the Difficulties of Interschool Athletics," Principal Charles F. Cook, Concord, N. H., high school; general discussion.

At one o'clock the members of the conference, with the members of the Schoolmasters' Club of New Hampshire, were the guests of the College at lunch in College Hall. A general discussion of "The School as a Social Center" followed, under the direction of the president of the club, Principal E. W. Butterfield, Dover, N. H., high school.

"The Relation of the Secondary School to the College" was considered Friday evening. The speakers were: Superintendent Mason S. Stone of Vermont, who emphasized the position of the high school in its two-fold character as a college preparatory school and as itself the "people's college;" Principal G. W. Bingham, of Pinkerton Academy, Derry, N. H., who discussed entrance requirements; Principal S. W. Robertson, Rochester, N. H., high school, who considered the advisability of giving admission credits for any subjects that are not now so treated; and Miss Elsie D. Fairbanks, Manchester, N. H., high school, who treated the lack of uniformity in entrance requirements.

At the concluding session of the conference, Saturday morning, May 16, Principal Harlan P. Amen, of Phillips Exeter Academy spoke on "The Place of the Academy in our Educational System," and Superintendent Henry C. Morrison of New Hampshire discussed "The Correlation of the Educational Forces of a State."

Superintendent Morrison's address was warmly approved. A committee, composed of Principal G. W. Bingham, Prof. C. D. Adams and Dr. H. H. Horne, framed the following resolutions:

"Resolved, that efficient elementary public schools are a fundamental requisite in a free state, and that no proper co-ordination of our educational forces can be secured unless these schools are fostered by lively popular interest, and by such liberal financial support as will secure competent teachers in the common schools. And to this end,

"Resolved further, that we heartily endorse the following opinions of Superintendent Morrison: 'It has often been said that our educational system has grown from the top down. That is true historically, and the fact constitutes our present limitation. The upper stories excel in financial support, in prestige, and in efficiency; the nearer the fountain we go, the more evidence we find of poverty, of neglect, of futility. An educational system in a democracy must be democratic; that is the price of its existence, and that is usually its proudest boast. Theoretically, every child in our state, and in many of our sister states, is entitled to preparation for the higher education at public expense. Democracy says that he shall have his opportunity. Practically, the children of relatively few districts have any such opportunity, for the reason that the common school at home is so often cheerfully unable to prepare them for the high school at all, or because their opportunity does not and cannot lie in the only field toward which any accessible secondary institution can lead them. Close the doors of opportunity to a single American boy and you may be robbing democracy of a potential leader. Close the doors of opportunity to a large group of boys and you certainly are robbing democracy of potential leadership. Perhaps our greatest present peril as a nation is that we shall fail to get all of our leadership under the discipline and training of the higher education. We still have, as we always have had, the anomaly of an aristocratic education serving a social body that is profoundly democratic. We must reverse the direction of the growth of the past and henceforth build from the bottom up, rather than from the top down, build upon the basis of a common school system that is efficient and universal, and as nearly equal in all directions as it is possible to make it. Given the product of that kind of a system, the problem of the high school, of the college, of the educational association, will well-nigh solve itself.'"

DARTMOUTH 3—BOWDOIN 0

In the first home game of the season,

April 28, Dartmouth defeated Bowdoin 3 to 0. It was a pitchers' battle, in which Captain Glaze pitched better ball than Harris and received perfect support. The score:

DARTMOUTH 2—BOWDOIN 1

Dartmouth again defeated Bowdoin, April 29, in a fast and interesting game. Hits by Leonard, Glaze, and Eaton gave the home team two runs in the first inning. Mitchell shut out his opponents without a hit until the ninth, when McDade's single scored Wandtk, and Schildmiller's assist to the plate prevented Bowdoin from tying the score. The summary:

VERMONT 3—DARTMOUTH 0

Dartmouth lost a brilliant game to the University of Vermont at the Oval May 2. Neither Collins nor Captain Glaze was hit to any extent except in the sixth, when after a chance to retire the side, Glaze allowed a single that won the game for the Vermonters. Three hundred students, with a band, accompanied the visitors. The score:

TRACK ATHLETICS

THIRD CONSECUTIVE VICTORY

Dartmouth's track and field representatives for the third consecutive season won the New England track and field championships, in which eleven representative colleges took part, at Technology Field, Brookline, May 23. Dartmouth's total was 49 points—one of the greatest on record in the association. Bowdoin, the Maine intercollegiate champion, was second with 19 points. Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Wesleyan were bracketed for third with 18 points, while Williams, Amherst, Brown, Maine, Trinity, Tufts, and Vermont followed in that order.

The conditions could not be considered good, the air being still and heavy, but nevertheless two records were broken, one was equalled, and there was another brilliant performance by Captain Shaw of Dartmouth, the greatest hurdler in the college world today. The new marks were made in the field events, Palmer of Dartmouth and Horrax of Williams sharing the honor of establishing the new figures in the high jump—5ft. 11 3-4 in.—an improvement of one quarter inch over the mark set by Horrax at Worcester last year (also a new Dartmouth record).

Pevear, Dartmouth's all-round weight thrower, erased the figures for throwing the discus made by A. K. Dearborn of Wesleyan two years ago from the roll of honor by heaving the missile 123 ft. 8 in. (also a new Dartmouth record), an improvement of 2 ft. 9 in. over Dearborn's record. Shaw equalled the world's record for the fourth time in the high hurdles, but his misfortune in knocking over a hurdle lost him an opportunity for sharing the 15 1-5s mark with Kreanzlein, the present holder. Over the low barriers, at the longer distance, he equalled the New England Intercollegiate record made by John Hubbard of Amherst two years ago, skipping over the sticks in 24 1-5s, (a new Dartmouth record).

There were many individual stars, but Sherman of Dartmouth was the leader of them all, winning both sprints and the running broad jump. In the hundred he ran in 10 1-5 seconds, and one watch caught him in 10 flat; while he ran the 220-event in 22 1-5 seconds. His performance in the running broad jump, made Friday in the trials, stood the test of the finals, and he himself could not better it. His total of points was 15. Pevear scored eleven points, while Shaw was the other best Dartmouth contributor to the large total, by capturing ten points in the two hurdle events.

Next to Sherman, however, the work of Horrax of Williams featured. The Williams captain shared in winning the high jump with Palmer of Dartmouth, won the pole vault, and secured second place in the high hurdle race, scoring in all twelve points of the sixteen made by his college. The summaries:

FIFTH PLACE AT PHILADELPHIA

In the intercollegiate championship meet in Philadelphia, May 30, Dartmouth secured fifth place, with 17 points. Cornell, the winner, scored 34 points, Pennsylvania 29 1-2, Yale 22, and Harvard 17 1-2. The other point-winners were Michigan and Swarthmore with 6 each, Princeton and Columbia with 4 each, and Syracuse with 3. Captain Shaw's performance of 15 1-5 seconds in the high hurdles established a new intercollegiate record and equalled the world's mark. He also won third place in the low hurdles. Sherman finished second in the 100, third in the 220, and fourth in the broad jump. Palmer tied with Harwood of Harvard in the high jump.

INTERSCHOLASTIC MEET

The seventeenth annual interscholastic meet, which was held at the Oval, May 16, resulted in a victory for Tilton Seminary with a total of 23 points. Worcester South High was second with 21 points, and Worcester Academy third with 15. Bartlett of Worcester Academy won three firsts and broke two Dartmouth interscholastic records. In the high jump he cleared 5 feet, 10 1-2 inches. Whitney of Tilton jumped 22 feet, 1 3-4 inches in the broad. The visiting athletes were entertained in College Hall in the evening.

JUNIOR WEEK

The annual Junior Promenade, May 19-21, was eminently successful. The events of the first day were Dartmouth's victory over Harvard at the Oval, Nevers' orchestral concert on the porch of College Hall, the presentation of "The Other Fellow," by the dramatic club at College Hall, and several fraternity dances. Wednesday, May 20, a new feature—a society circus, at the Oval—proved highly amusing and successful; Nevers' orchestra gave another concert at College Hall; "The Promenaders," the best musical comedy in the history of Dartmouth theatricals, was presented in Webster Hall, and several fraternity dances followed. Thursday afternoon the faculty defeated the College team at tennis. The prom itself, in College Hall Thursday evening, was one of the most successful in years. Nevers' orchestra furnished music, and the patronesses were: Mesdames William Jewett Tucker, S. B. Fay, W. M. Persons, J. S. Reeves, F. A. Updyke, and Mrs. Buffington of Fall River, Mass., Mrs. Howland of New Bedford, Mass., Mrs. Newton of Winthrop, Mass., Mrs. Morawski of Roxbury, Mass., and Mrs. Watson, of Roxbury, Mass. The committee in charge of the festivities was composed of: F. B. Williams, Fall River; N. J. Howland, New Bedford; F. H. Morawski, Roxbury, Mass.; A. E. Newton, Winthrop, Mass., and T. C. Wellsted, Cleveland.

GYMNASIUM CAMPAIGN

A campaign for a new gymnasium has been inaugurated by Prof. John W. Bowler with gratifying results. The undergraduates—and some have not yet been seen by the subscription committee—have pledged $12,000. It is hoped that this generous sum will serve as a foundation on which the alumni and friends of the College will build.

Rev. Pliny Fisk Barnard died at his home in Westminster, Vt., May 28, 1908, of the infirmities of age. Mr. Barnard was born in Waitsfield, Vt., Nov. 9, 1820, and prepared for college at the academies of Jericho and Montpelier, in his native state. After graduating he studied theology at Bangor Seminary, graduating in 1846. His first pastorate was with the Congregational church at Richmond, Me., where he was ordained Jan. 14, 1847, and dismissed June 19, 1856. He went at once to Williamstown, Vt., and remained there as pastor until 1870. For six weeks, in the summer of 1864, he served in the United States Christian Commission among the soldiers at the front. From 1870 to 1873 he was pastor at Westhampton, Mass., in 1873-80 at Westminster, Vt., in 1880-3 at South Royalston, Mass., in 1883-90 at Wendell, Mass., and finally in 1890-98 at Dummerston, Vt. In all these pastorates he was devoted, earnest, and successful. His personal character was such as to add weight to his words, and wherever he has preached his memory is a cherished possession of the church. Since his final retirement from the ministry, in his 78th year, he made his home at Westminster. He was married Nov. 4, 1846, to Julia, daughter of Rev. James Hobart of Berlin, Vt., a graduate of Dartmouth in 1794. She still survives, with a son and four daughters of their eight children.

CLASS OF 1844

A long life, filled with usefulness to his generation, and crowned with the esteem and honor of his fellows, closed with the death of Amos Hadley, Ph.D., at his home in Concord, N. H., May 6, 1908. Doctor Hadley was born in Dunbarton, N. H., May 14, 1825, and prepared for college at Pembroke Academy and Concord Literary Institute. The first two years after graduation he was principal of Dunbarton High School, and for the next two years a law student in the office of Pierce and Minot of Concord, doing also meanwhile some work in teaching. In 1848 he was admitted to the bar, but never seriously engaged in the practice of his profession. From 1848 to 1851 he was principal of the Manchester High School, living in the adjoining town of Bow, which town he represented in the legislatures of 1850 and '51. In 1851-3 he was secretary and legal adviser of the New England Fire Insurance Company. He returned to Concord in 1853, to become editor and publisher of the State Capital Reporter, in association with Cyrus Barton. In 1857 he left this paper, to be associated with George G. Fogg '39 on the Independent Democrat, remaining until 1867. He was meanwhile state printer in 1854-8, and clerk of the common council of Concord from 1853 to 1868. In 1867-9 he was state superintendent of public instruction; in 1870-1 editor of the New Hampshire Statesman; in 1871-3 associate principal of the State Normal School at Plymouth; in 1874, superintendent of the Concord schools; in 1875-7, chief of the board of instruction of Penacook Normal Academy; from 1877 for many years he maintained a private school in Concord. The above statement does not by any means cover all his activities. In 1847-50 he was brigade and division quartermaster of the National Guard of New Hampshire; in 1855-72 trustee of the Concord public library, in which capacity he helped to select the first lot of books purchased for the library; trustee of the State Normal School, 1870-2; trustee of the state library, 1866-9; member of the superintending school committee, 1855-8, and of the board of education of Concord, 1867-74; reporter of supreme court decisions, 1865-71; secretary of the New Hampshire Historical Society, 1853-7, 1874-90, and its president, 1893-5; member of the constitutional convention, 1889. He was also a member of the New Hampshire Antiquarian Society, the New England Historic-Genealogical Society, the Webster Historical Society, the Appalachian Club, and the Sons of the American Revolution. In 1903 he was editor-in-chief of the "History of Concord," prepared under direction of the city government. Doctor Hadley was twice married, but had been many years a widower. One daughter alone survives him. An appreciative notice in the Concord Monitor ends thus: "His life was as creditable in its private as in its public aspects, and those who were close to him knew him as a devoted and indulgent husband and father, and as one whose nature felt the deepest reverence for God."

CLASS OF 1884

Secretary, Dr. James P. Houston, 1180 Sheffield Ave., Chicago

At a meeting of the Southern California Association of Dartmouth Alumni held at Los Angeles, California, May 23, 1908, it was

Resolved: That the death of Senator A. E. Nutt of San Diego, California, at Tuc-son, Arizona, on April 28, 1908, should be brought to the notice of the Alumni of Dartmouth by publication in the Bi-MONTHLY.

Senator Nutt was an alumnus of Dartmouth of the Class of 1884. About four years after his graduation, he went to San Diego, Cal., and entered into the practice of the law. He soon acquired a good clientage, and a good reputation in the community about him.

He was early elected a member of the board of aldermen of that city, and served as president of the board for several years. The position demanded and received from him hard work and cool judgment, as the city was undergoing rapid building and improvement of all kinds.

He was chosen one of the forty senators of California, and served in that position with such eclat that he was the selected candidate of his city for the Republican nomination for Congress from the 8th Congressional District of California, and was only defeated after more than fifty ballots in the convention.

His ability was so conspicuous, that had he lived, and been willing to continue in politics, there was no position in his state, to which he could not have aspired with flattering promises of success.

He leaves a wife and daughter, and in his death his family loses a beloved husband and father, his city and state an able citizen, and Dartmouth College a distinguished son.

CLASS OF 1899

Secretary, Elmer W. Barstow, New Britain, Conn.

Dr. Ralph Spencer Wilder, for five years past assistant physician at the Medfield Insane Asylum, Medfield, Mass., was found in his room at that institution April twenty-second, dead from a self-inflicted bullet wound in the head. Doctor Wilder was a sufferer from tuberculosis, and at the best his hope for life was for a period of but a few months. It is believed that the knowledge of his surely approaching end, together with the intense pain he was suffering, unbalanced his mind, with the sad result that he took his own life. Doctor Wilder was born in Winchendon, Mass., October 9, 1877, being the son of Benjamin Oliver and Ella Walker Wilder. He was fitted for college at the Murdock High School, Winchendon, where he was graduated in 1894. Entering Dartmouth under much financial difficulty, he succeeded in earning his own way through college. His rank as a scholar was commendable, and he was one of the most popular athletes of his time, being the holder of the intercollegiate record in the pole vault, as well as a leader in other events. After graduation he entered Dartmouth Medical School, where he received his degree in February, 1902. He then served for a year as house physician at the Mary Hitchcock Memorial Hospital, and at the end of that time went to Medfield, Mass., where he accomplished five years of faithful and efficient service as assistant physician. His death was a great shock to many friends in Medfield and in Winchendon, and brings profound sorrow to many in college circles who admired him for his strong and noble qualities. Doctor Wilder was unmarried, but is survived by his father and mother and one sister. Funeral services were held at Old Winchendon, and he was buried with simple rites near the place of his birth. Owen A. Hoban of Gardner represented the class at the funeral, and conveyed the sympathy of the men of '99 to the sorrowing family. Mr. Hoban has written as follows to the class secretary: "You will be surprised when I tell you that his once strong body was but a shadow, so wasted had it become by consumption. It would be impossible for me to tell you how much like his whole life was the blunt simplicity of the last rite performed over his dead body. I went to high school and to college with Wilder, and perhaps know as much about his beginnings and struggles as any of our class. No man of us had any more humble beginnings or worked harder for the victory than he. All Dartmouth men in our time honored and loved him, but not any more so than did everyone who came in contact with this simple-minded, whole-souled man."

Dr. Andrew Emerson Field died May 9 at the home of his son-in-law, Dr. H. O. Worthen, in Barre, Vt., the cause of his death being a paralytic stroke received April 20. Doctor Field was the son of Alpheus and Rhoda (Emerson) Field, and was born in Berlin, Vt., Dec. 21, 1820. He attended the Washington County Grammar School at Montpelier and Thetford Academy, and taught for ten successive winter terms. He studied medicine with Dr. Orrin Smith of Berlin, and attended lectures at Woodstock and Dartmouth. In 1846 he began practice in the neighboring town of Orange, and remained there for five years. In 1851 he removed to Washington, Vt., and devoted himself to the hard routine of country practice until 1870. In 1871 he began practice in Barre, being also proprietor of a drug store until 1878. Since about 1895 his health had been too precarious to admit of active practice. While in Washington he was active in town affairs, and repeatedly held town office. In 1857 he represented the town in the state constitutional convention. In 1861 he was appointed one of the examining surgeons for Orange County to examine recruits for the War of the Rebellion, and afterwards served as pension examiner. He was married, Feb. 29, 1848, to Clarinda, daughter of Capt. David Nelson of Orange, who died Dec. 20, 1902. Of their children, a daughter died young and a son and a daughter are still living.
